CONDITIONS OF SALE

1. The highest Bidder to be the Buyer, and if any dispute arise between two or more Bidders, the Lot so in dispute shall be immediately put up again and re-sold.

2. The Auctioneer reserves the right to reject any bid which is merely a nominal or fractional advance, and therefore, in his judgment, likely to affect the Sale injuriously.

3. The Purchasers to give their names and addresses, and to pay down a cash deposit, or the whole of the Purchase-money, if required, in default of which the Lot or Lots so purchased to be immediately put up again and re-sold.

4. The Lots to be taken away at the Buyer's Expense and Risk upon the conclusion of the Sale, and the remainder of the Purchase-money to be absolutely paid, or otherwise settled for to the satisfaction of the Auctioneer, on or before delivery; in default of which the undersigned will not hold themselves responsible if the Lots be lost, stolen, damaged, or destroyed, but they will be left at the sole risk of the Purchaser.

5. While the undersigned will not hold themselves responsible for the correctness of the description, genuineness, or authenticity of, or any fault or defect in, any Lot, and make no Warranty whatever, they will, upon receiving previous to date of Sale trustworthy expert opinion in writing that any Painting or other Work of Art is not what it is represented to be, use every effort on their part to furnish proof to the contrary; failing in which, the object or objects in question will be sold subject to the declaration of the aforesaid expert, he being liable to the Owner or Owners thereof, for damage or injury occasioned thereby.

6. To prevent inaccuracy in delivery, and inconvenience in the settlement of the Purchases, no Lot can, on any account, be removed during the Sale.

7. Upon failure to comply with the above conditions, the money deposited in part payment shall be forfeited; all Lots uncleared within one day from conclusion of Sale shall be re-sold by public or private sale, without further notice, and the deficiency (if any) attending such re-sale shall be made good by the defaulter at this Sale, together with all charges attending the same. This Condition is without prejudice to the right of the Auctioneer to enforce the contract made at this Sale, without such re-sale, if he thinks fit.

PREFATORY NOTES

COLLECTORS and connoisseurs are only too well aware that it is becoming increasingly difficult to secure really fine examples of the arts of old Japan. In certain kinds the original source of supply may be said to be exhausted. But in Japan, as elsewhere, religious art, when at its best, was unquestionably the greatest art; and because of its religious character, and for other reasons, hardly any of this has heretofore reached us. Peculiar circumstances, which will be explained farther on, have, however, enabled the enterprising and enlightened owner of the present collection to bring together examples of Buddhist art of the best periods, in number sufficient to afford a fair general view of its history and development in Japan.

Buddhist Art.—Buddhism had already existed for some twelve centuries as an organized religion before it reached Japan by way of China and Corea. It had become divided into several sects, had produced a voluminous literature and a system of artistic symbolism as complete as that of Byzantine Christianity. This symbolic art seems to have originated in India while that country was still under the influence of the Greek art of the Alexandrine period. The classic imprint, though greatly modified by native Hindoo and Chinese ideas, is still strongly evident in the oldest Buddhist works preserved in Japanese temples and palaces. Painted in gold lacquer or inlaid in mother-of-pearl, Hindoo karyobinga (birds with woman's heads) still show their affinity with the sirens and harpies of Greek vase paintings. The apsaras (angels) floating in air, and the Buddha giving himself as food to the famished tiger on the ancient tabernacle of Horiuji* have the elongated proportions and the graceful lines of Hellenistic sculpture. The general ordonnance of the oldest Buddhist paintings is much like that to which we are accustomed in late Greek work, though the Chinese element manifests itself plainly in curiously contorted rock strata and many other touches of an idealism alien to the Greek.

Kaneoka.—The three panels by Kaneoka Kosé in the present collection—from the door of another Buddhist tabernacle—still show the lasting influence of the Greek style, though later than the tabernacle of Horiuji by three hundred years. In the meantime the capital had been moved from Nara to Kioto, and Buddhism had become, in a sort, the established religion, having almost absorbed the native Shinto cult.† The esoteric doctrines introduced from China by the great preacher, Kobo Daishi, had taken root and demanded a new symbolic expression. In technique, also, there had been very considerable changes. The old elegance of line is preserved in this Kaneoka triptych, but coupled with a new feeling for life; the attitudes are still graceful as in the Kwannon, or majestic as in the Amida, but are more expressive; the coloring is much more varied, the ornamentation of the drapery and other accessories more sumptuous and elaborate. A purely Japanese spirit had begun to assert itself, and the artists were often laymen, or, when devoted to religion, they exercised secular professions as well. Kobo Daishi, himself, laid out gardens and painted portraits; and Kaneoka, one of the most versatile artists of Japan, was noted for his pictures of horses, landscapes and flowers quite as much as for his religious paintings. The legend tells of a horse painted by him escaping at night to browse upon the neighboring rice-fields, until, having been detected by some farmer, who observed the mud clinging to his hoofs, he was restrained by a halter. The story may be taken as evidence of the degree of realism to which he had attained in profane subjects, yet the religious paintings attributed to him have much of the ideal grandeur and suavity of a Cimabue or a Duccio. The nearly contemporary mosaics of St. Praxede are not to be compared, as art, with Kaneoka's work.

Takuma.—Kaneoka died A.D. 931. Of his followers, known as the Kosé school, though they seem to have hung close to the skirts of the Chinese painters of the Tang and Sung dynasties, Takuma Tamenari (who flourished circa A.D. 1050) showed so much originality that he is ranked as the head of a school of his own. Japanese Buddhism had in his time entered upon a new phase. The austere practice and the mystic doctrine of Kobo Daishi were abandoned, and the popular and influential preachers were those who showed most indulgence to mundane foibles, and who could describe most eloquently the jewelled beauties of the fabled paradise of Mount Meru. Taku-ma's most noted work is the painting of the nine cycles of paradise, in the Phoenix Hall of the Bido-in of Uji. The broadening of the line in the four Takuma panels, when compared with the knife-like sharpness and regularity of the line in the Kaneoka triptych, is to be noticed. It is the first step in a progressive thickening and shading of the line, which reached its height in the graphic draughtsmanship of the later Kano school, and which led finally to painting in values without the use of the line.

Kano Eitoku.—The designer of some of the finest carvings in the collection was one of the most celebrated painters of the school of Kano, whose practice was founded in the main upon that of the Chinese painters of the Sung and Yuen. Kano Eitoku rose to prominence under that strangest genius in the history of Japan, the stable boy who became ruler of his native land, conqueror of Corea, and whose dream it was to plant a Japanese dynasty upon the throne of China. The carvings in question are from Hideyoshi's pleasure palace of Momoyama. Eitoku's pupil, Kano Sanraku, is believed to have shared with him in the work of decoration.

Eitoku was noted for the grand scale of his paintings. He rejoiced in painting hermits and heroes, large as life, under plum trees or pine trees of corresponding height. These he dashed off with a brush of straw dipped in a bucket of India ink. The breadth and vigor of the carvings from Momoyama show that in their execution he was seconded by a carver worthy to be associated with him.

Jinguro.—They are, in fact, among the best works of Jinguro, second of his race, and first among the famous carvers of Japan. He is said to have belonged to the Tategawa family of temple builders, of which Mr. Matsuki is a descendant.

Work in Metals.—The period which we have cursorily reviewed was that in which Buddhist art was at its best. The painted remains, as should be expected, are much less numerous than those in bronze and other metals. The colossal Buddhas and Kwannons will never leave Japan, but Mr. Matsuki has been happy in obtaining many interesting temple ornaments in bronze or gold-surfaced brass which may give some idea of the work in metals of this period. The graceful little Buddha from Thibet is not unworthy to represent in a small way the colossi of Nara and Kamakura.

Though much that is of the greatest interest has since been produced, Buddhist art has never regained its ancient supremacy. From the earliest times there had flourished along with it one or more schools of painters, enlumineurs, caricaturists, who devoted their talents to the illustration of romances (monogatari), to the illumination of the sacred rolls, or to humorous and satirical drawings in which frogs and mice and foxes mimicked the doings of the court and of the bonzes. This was the secular and native side of old Japanese art. From it has come much of what is most characteristic in the minor arts of more recent times. The deftness of touch, the happy blending of gold and colors, the delicate or humorous observation shown in many of the motifs on the Himeji leathers of this collection may be said to be an inheritance from the noble but fun-loving and color-loving miniaturists of the Tosa and Yamato schools. Still, in this little known art of leather we find many Buddhist motifs, and, for a time it was greatly influenced by the leather work of Europe. The envoys sent by some of the Southern nobles to Pope Gregory XIII. brought back, among other presents, pieces of Venetian stamped leather, some of which may, perhaps, be found in the present collection. Later, the privileged Dutch traders brought in many specimens of their work, which were used, like the softer and less elaborately decorated native leathers for linings of helmets and cuirasses, for coverings of boxes, pouches, and other objects. These had, for a time, a marked effect on the native manufacture.

It remains to say that Mr. Matsuke, as descendant of famous architects and temple builders, has had opportunities as a collector which could occur to no other man. His maternal grandfather, Bansai Tategawa, to whom was entrusted the restoration of several ancient Shinto and Buddhist shrines, became in this way the owner of the carved and painted decorations removed from the crumbling structures. These formed the basis of his collection.

At the time of the Imperial Restoration, about thirty-five years ago, an attempt was made to forcibly separate the Shinto and Buddhist cults, which, in many cases, had for ages shared the same temples. Artistic relics of great age and value were swept out of the "purified" Shinto shrines. About the same time the abolition of the feudal system led to the dismantling of many castles of the daimio, and their marvels of decorative art were added to the already rich Tategawa collection, while others fell into the hands of people of taste, who, also, were anxious to save them from destruction. It was in following up these last that Mr. Matsuke came upon the interesting specimens of old leather work, of which he has had practically the first choice.

OLD LEATHERS

669 Old Dutch Leather Panels.

Hand tooled on a metallic ground glazed with rich orange lacquer. Anemones, tulips, pomegranates and other fruits painted in oil colors. These leathers were imported into Japan about A.D. 1580. They are from the ceiling of the tea-room adjoining the castle of Takamatsu, in the province of Sanuki. Under the government of the celebrated Hideyoshi, envoys were sent to Rome to open communications with the Pope, who, on their return, sent by them presents of fine leathers, rugs, and other works of art, which were later distributed by Hideyoshi among his favorite feudatories. These panels, and some others of European manufacture in this collection, were thus brought into Japan.

22½ inches by 29 inches.

680 Old Japanese Kokuin Leather.

Worked in the manner of ancient Venetian leather, with small hand stamps, repeated to form a large pattern. The stamps are of unusual design—peacock's feathers, etc. They form very large rosettes, glazed with gold lacquer over metal leaf. This and following two numbers are of the highest art in leather ever attained by Japanese leather artists, and considered by all Japanese leather collectors as the only specimens of their kind in existence. From the Asano collection. Osaka Asano, a celebrated armorer, flourished between A. D. 1680 and 1750. These leathers were part of his stock used for linings of cuirasses, greaves and helmets, and for the caparisons of war-horses. Most of the collection was dispersed at the time of the revolution in Japan, but these pieces, with some others, were retained in the possession of the family until recently. This style, in imitation of the old Venetian leathers brought back by Hideyoshi's envoys, is known in Japan as the Kokuin-de, or "black seal" style, the impressions of the tools showing dark on the gold ground.

Lantern, height, 48 inches; stand, height, 42 inches.

715 Pair of Keman.

Gold-surfaced brass. From the Shiba temple, the mausoleum of the second Tokugawa ruler, Iyemitsu. The keman are of heavy metal, with chiselled figures of Kwannon among lotus flowers on both sides, in almost full relief. The hanging chains, or yoraku, are of lotus design, in chiselled brass, and beads of turquoise. Usually these temple ornaments are of thin brass, hammered and pierced, and their hanging chains of glass beads. Their origin is from a curious custom of early Hindoo Buddhism. Ladies of rank were accustomed to present to the temple, as ex-votos, their jewelled coiffures; but in time these keman wrought of metal and beads were substituted for them. The knot in the keman stands for the knot of silk which tied the hair; the flowers on either side of it, for those worn as part of the headdress; and the hanging strings of beads, for the strings of jewels pendant at either side of the head. These are two of the three keman which hung in the inner temple above the famous gold-lacquer tomb, and which were stolen during the Revolution. Highest art in brass work of early Tokugawa era. Date, A.D. 1630. (See Prefatory Notes.)

Length, 30 inches; width, 14 inches.

716 Pair of Keman.

Pierced gold-surfaced brass. The knot in hammered work in relief, the pendant chains on each side entirely of pierced metal. Imperial crest of chrysanthemum in centre. Date, 1650.

RARE AND IMPORTANT PAINTINGS BY KANEOKA AND OTHER EARLY BUDDHIST ARTISTS

727 Painted Panel.

From the door of a shrine. Representing Amida Buddha in glory, standing on the mystic lotus in the clouds, in the attitude of benediction. The flesh parts are in dull gold, the drapery in dull purple, covered with minutely wrought patterns in gold. On the blue-gray background are wavy lines in gold, radiating from the Buddha. At his feet is a small figure of a Buddhist priest in prayer. By Kaneoka Kosé.

728 Painted Panel.

From the door of a shrine. Representing Jizo, the Protector of Pilgrims. He holds in the right hand a priest's staff, and in the left the jewel of the soul. He is seated on an elaborately decorated lotus throne. The flesh parts are white, the drapery in colors and gold. Below, in an attitude of adoration, is Kwannon, in the masculine form, standing on a lotus among the clouds, and holding a jewelled lotus pod. The flesh parts are in gold, the drapery in dull purple, minutely patterned in gold. By Kaneoka Kosé.

729 Painted Panel.

From the door of a shrine. Representing Daisho Fudo, the Averter of Evil, seated on an elaborately decorated throne, wrapped in flames, holding the cord to bind and the sword to smite evil spirits. The flesh parts are black, the drapery in colors and gold. Below, in an attitude of adoration, is Dai Seishi, in the masculine form, standing on the lotus among the clouds. The flesh parts are in dull gold, the drapery in dull purple, minutely patterned in gold. By Kaneoka Kosé.

NOTE.—The three paintings just described formed the panels of a door of a Buddhist shrine in the Shinto temple of Otokoyama Hachiman, in the province of Yamashiro, where occurred one of the most important battles of the Japanese revolutionary war, A. D. 1868. Owing to the decree against the union of the Buddhist and Shinto cults, issued soon after the close of the war, these magnificent paintings were torn from their place in the temple, but were happily preserved by an enlightened collector of the neighboring province of Yamato, Mr. J. Nishimura, from whose celebrated collection they have come into the hands of the present owner.

The extreme rarity of Kaneoka's works makes it desirable to say that the ascription of these paintings to his brush is not a mere assumption of the present owner. They were among the most notable treasures of the Otokoyama temple. The expressive grace of the figures, the marvellous precision of drawing in the ornaments, and the delicacy and effectiveness of the line modelling are known as the chief characteristics of the works of the greatest of Japanese religious painters. The painting is executed on a heavy Chinese silk canvas known to collectors as the product of the early days of the Sung dynasty. This is backed with old manuscripts of several periods, some relating to Buddhist medical practice, others containing poems on Otokoyama, and commentaries on the Buddhist scriptures.

Owing to the rare good fortune which led to the utilization of the ancient rolls to decorate the panels of a shrine, the paintings are now in an uncommonly good state of preservation after the lapse of a thousand years. (See Prefatory Notes for a further account of Kaneoka and Buddhist art in general.)

730 Buddhist Scroll.

Mounted as a panel for the decoration of a room. The figure represents the Shinto goddess of the Sun, Amaterasu, adopted into the Buddhist creed under the name of Nitten. She holds a lotus stalk and flower, which bears the red disk of the sun with the "golden crow," famous in the early legends of the Kojiki.* The drapery is in lively colors, the flesh pink. Around the head is a halo with flames. By an artist of the Takuma family. Early twelfth century, A.D.

* The Bible of the Shinto faith. Translated into English by Professor Chamberlain.

731 Buddhist Scroll.

Mounted as a panel. The figure represents the goddess of the Moon, Getten, from whose one thousand intelligences the sages derive inspiration. She holds a bowl of cherry blossoms, which supports the white disk of the moon, with the white rabbit which the Japanese fancy they see in it. The flesh is whiter than that of the Sun goddess, and the colors of the drapery more subdued. By an artist of the Takuma family. Early thirteenth century A.D.

732 Buddhist Scroll.

Mounted as a panel. The figure represents the Shinto Spirit of the Storm, Susanōo, as adopted by Chinese Buddhism under the name of Futen. He holds a banner blown by the wind, as is also his drapery and the flames of the halo encircling his head. By an artist of the Takuma family. Early thirteenth century, A.D.

733 Buddhist Scroll.

Mounted as a panel. The figure represents Bonten, the four-headed ruler of the universe. In Buddhist symbolism the four heads symbolize the four quarters of the world. She holds a sceptre and lotus stalk. By an artist of the Takuma family. Early thirteenth century A.D.

The four panels just described come from a Buddhist temple of Hiroshima, in the province of Aki, on the Inland Sea of Japan.

734 A Court Lady.

She is shown half length, of the size of life, leaning slightly forward, holding in her right hand a sprig of pear blossoms. The flesh parts are delicately modelled, the folds of the drapery indicated by heavy lines in India ink. By Sessai. Circa, A. D. 1780.

762

In studying this group of Japanese paintings it is well to observe the progressive steps of the change from the most ancient to the modern style, shown in the flat tints and extremely delicate line work of the earliest paintings, and the heavy lines and effect of relief in the modern.

OLD CHINESE AND JAPANESE PAINTINGS ON BAMBOO

735 Goten Sudari, or Palace Window Blind.

Of painted bamboo. An emperor of the Sung dynasty of China, with his attendant. The emperor wears the imperial "cloud" cap, and bears a sceptre of vari-colored jade. By a Chinese artist of the Ming period. From the Imperial Palace, Pekin.

736 Goten Sudari, or Palace Window Blind.

Of painted bamboo. An emperor of the Sung, with his minister, his children and their preceptor. The latter holds the younger of the two children on the back of a tame deer, while the older boy amuses his baby brother by ringing a bell. By a Chinese artist of the Ming period. From the Imperial Palace, Pekin.

This charming bit of genre has a breadth of effect and a surprising richness of color which must place it among the best original works of the Ming period. Allowance made for certain conventionalities of drawing, the variety and the naturalness of the expressions, and the movements of the figures, and the judgment shown in the composition, prove it to be the work of no ordinary artist. We may obtain through these sudari some better insight into the great art of China than can be afforded by the decorated porcelains, almost invariably the work of inferior artists or copyists.

737 Oblong Sudari.

Painted birds, branches and rock on a red ground. From the Imperial Palace at Peking.

Height, 71 inches ; width, 30 inches.

749 Old Panel of Satsuma Cedar.

Bird and willow tree carved in relief. Leather applied.

Height, 67 inches ; width, 33 inches.

750 Panel.

Of Satsuma cedar, painted with the subject of the Lady Tokiwa, mother of Yoshitsune, Yoritomo and Yorinori, with her three children in the storm ; a famous episode in Japanese history. The lady is dressed in blue. By Rosetsu, contemporary of Okio. Circa A.D. 1780. From the castle of Hiroshima.

Height, 68 inches ; width, 34 inches.

751 Table Screen.

In twelve folds. Of carved lacquer in various colors and gold. The design represents the Chinese fairyland, located by the poets in the mountains which separate China from Thibet. Hsi Wang Mu, the fairy queen, is shown holding court in a rocky wilderness. By a Chinese artist of circa A.D. 1650. From the Imperial Palace at Peking, part of the spoil taken by the Japanese army during the late Boxer rebellion.

Height, 29 inches ; width of each panel, 6 inches.

752 Pair of Chinese Court Fans.

With long handles covered with gilt leather, the flaps of carved wood.

Length, 64 inches.

753 Old Temple Screen.

In the form of a torii, or temple gateway. The background is of old Dutch leather on which in relief are Buddhist emblems, the elephant with shrine, Chinese sceptre, gong and water-pots. The supports are carved in the form of elephants' heads. From the temple of Shoshagen in Harima. The caparison of the elephant is inlaid with mother-of-pearl and tortoiseshell. Attributed to Ritsuo, famous for inlaid work. Circa A.D. 1750.

Height, 41½ inches.

764

754 Unique Folding Chair.

Elaborately carved oak. Decorated leather seat and back. From Koya temple, province of Kii. Date, circa A.D. 1500.

Height, 55 inches.

755 Old Leather-covered Cabinet.

With doors of four panels. Inside of the cabinet, designs of lotus plants and Buddhist deities on clouds are portrayed in gold lacquers. With elaborately carved stand.

Height, 54 inches ; width, 27 inches.

756 Circular Medallion.

Carved à jour, with the Spirit of Thunder beating his drum among the clouds. By Hida Takumi. Circa A.D. 1680.

757 Pair of Old Temple Shrine Panels.

Flying pheasant in soft green tone. Date, 1680.

Length, 22 inches ; width, 7 inches.

758 Three Ancient Corean Carvings.

In low relief. Very richly colored in gold, blue and red. Captured by Kiomasa, Hideoshi's general in command of his army invading Corea. These carvings were long preserved in the castle of Kumamoto. The subjects are the five-clawed dragon in clouds and the precious stone symbolizing the jewel of the soul. Kumamoto castle was destroyed during the Saigo rebellion of 1877. The panels came into the possession of Togiya, an art collector of that city, from whose collection they passed to the present owner.

Length, 106 inches ; width, 12½ inches.

759 Ancient Corean Carving.

Companion to the preceding.

Length, 68 inches ; width, 13 inches.

760 Old Palace Wall Carving.

Narrow upright panel. Design, lotus in blossom, with stork standing beneath the shelter of its broad leaves. Delightfully tinted. Date, 1720.

Height, 39 inches ; width, 9½ inches.

761 Cabinet Finished in Gold Lacquer.

The doors are lined within in old brocade. The exterior frieze is carved with plum blossoms and peonies painted the natural colors. The upper panels of the doors are carved with plums, the lower with the kiri crest, assumed by Hideyoshi ; the open panels between, barred with slender wooden rods, like a bird-cage. From Hideyoshi's palace of Momoyama (Peach Mountain), near Kioto.

Height, 48 inches ; width, 44 inches.

762 Panel of Carved, Gilt and Painted Wood.

The subject is a pair of pheasants in a bamboo grove. The pheasant is the symbol of affection in Japanese poetry. The frame, in the shape of a Chinese fan, is covered with gold lacquer. The carving is in full relief, showing front and back, and the subject is broadly treated, but with consummate knowledge of the action and the forms of the birds. Of the colors used, the peculiar green of the foliage, called "honoros-kusho" in Japanese, is no longer produced in Japan or China.

765

This panel and the two following are from the celebrated palace of Momoyama, built for Hideyoshi, and are the work of the first great carvers of the Jinguro family, from designs furnished by Eitoku, who finished the work by the application of gold and colors.

Height, 19½ inches ; width, 25½ inches.

763 Panel of Carved, Gilt and Painted Wood.

In the shape of a Chinese fan. The subject is a pair of hahacho (the laughing bird, frequently painted by artists of the Toso and Kano schools). The picturesque curves of the plum branches are characteristic of Eitoku's design. Carved by Jinguro I. Designed and painted by Eitoku. From the Momoyama palace.

Height, 23 inches ; width, 29 inches.

764 Panel.

Of carved gilt and painted wood in the shape of a Chinese fan. The subject is a pair of yamadori (mountain birds, celebrated in the ancient poems of the Manyoshu). The birds are resting among pine branches. The trees represented in these panels occur together continually in Japanese design and poetry. The bamboo stands for uprightness ; the plum for fortitude, because it flowers under the snow, and the pine for fidelity, because of its evergreen foliage. Carved by Jinguro I. Designed and painted by Eitoku. From the Momoyama palace.

Height 23½ inches ; width, 29 inches.

765 Large Temple Ramma.

Pale green lattice work, inlaid with carved panel of sleeping cat among peony flowers.

This remarkable carving was formerly over the threshold of the inner temple of Akiwa, in province of Totomi, which was partially destroyed by fire in 1774, and came into the possession of the ancestor of the collector. Ascribed to the sculptor Jinguro, with whose celebrated sleeping cat at Nikko it bears comparison.
